FRIDAY, JUNE 3, 1881.

FROM THE N. Y. TIMES.

MR. CONKLING'S DEFEAT.

Mr. Conkling received 35 votes yesterday, while 70 Republican members voted for other candidates. After all his exhausting and humiliating efforts, he obtains only one-third of the Republican vote. He was made Monday that "40 iron-clad members would vote for Mr. Conkling forever," but he did not have that number to start with, and "Mr. To" received only 28. It seems that 6 of Mr. Conkling's friends failed to appreciate the devotion of the sub-Senator who took the leap with Mr. Conkling, and it is possible that some of Mr. Platt's friends see fit to support somebody else before long. Mr. Conkling, in short, the defeat of the machine is complete, decisive and overwhelming.

Two-thirds of the Republican members of the Legislature have made formal declaration that they do not want Mr. Conkling re-elected. The time has come for him to withdraw from a contest in which there can be nothing but humiliation for him. To this day, his detractors have fed him with the notion that he was the choice of a majority of the Republican members, and as late as Monday night, a formal caucus was called in the belief that his supporters could control it. There is an end of drama. Mr. Conkling represents only a defeated minority of the Republican party of this State, in his present attitude. If he cares for the Republican party, its principles or its success, he will take himself out of the way at once. When he resigned his seat in the Senate, he left his personal friends very narrow ground on which to make a stand in his defense. When, after that resignation, he went to Albany to canvass for re-election, he left them no ground at all. Now, with more than two-thirds of the Republican members of the Legislature opposed to him, he cannot stay in the field a single day without making it clear that he is willing to win as an opponent of the Republican party, and by the aid of Democratic votes.

Mr. Conkling cannot win in that way. This world has small respect for a beaten Boss. The very Democrats who were willing to confer and conspire with him some days ago, when he pretended to represent a majority or nearly a majority of the Republican members, will waste no time in helping him to-day. The one thing that the Democrats want is an adjournment of the Legislature without any election, so that they may make mischief in the contest next fall, and retain their control in the United States Senate.

Can Mr. Conkling's thirty-five Republican votes be used for any such act of treachery to the Republican party? There is no reason to believe it. These members were attached to Mr. Conkling or admired him as a Republican leader. There is no evidence that they are willing to follow him as a boomer and ally of the Democrats. But it would be direct and open aid to the Democratic party if any of them should vote to adjourn the Legislature without an election of Senators.

If Mr. Conkling will not voluntarily withdraw—as his own self-respect and regard for the Republican party should prompt him to do—the members who have supported him should immediately drop him. Let them proceed and vote for other Republicans who are worthy of a seat in the Senate. Their constituents will not excuse them for adhering to Mr. Conkling after it has become known that two-thirds of the Republican members are opposed to him. That will be everywhere regarded as an attempt to break up the Republican party, either to form a new one, or to make an alliance with the Democrats. The Republican member who takes that course must expect to lose the confidence of his constituents, who will look upon him as no better than a Democrat in disguise.

In the small gathering on Monday night, there was much eloquent and impressive talk of the necessity of submitting to the will of the majority. If the party is to be yielded its preferences. Very well, let the minority who support Messrs. Conkling and Platt bow to the decision of the majority, and show their readiness to support other candidates. The Republican party will be united and victorious once more, in a single day, and all cause of controversy will be removed.

CONKLING TO BRAYE THE STORM.

Mr. Conkling and Platt held a conference with Gov. Cornell, Vice President Arthur and other Conkling leaders Monday night. It was resolved to keep Mr. Conkling and Mr. Platt before the Legislature to-morrow morning. Mr. Conkling's intimate friends are saying that the Administration will surely quarrel when they attempt to concentrate their votes upon any two of the three candidates. Mr. Conkling's friends are saying that the Administration will quarrel when they attempt to concentrate their votes upon any two of the three candidates.

There is also another and a more substantial reason why we should feel gratified at the success of Secretary Blaine's diplomacy. The ground upon which Lord Salisbury rejected our claims involved an important principle. It will be remembered that the bill we presented was for compensation on account of the direct and consequential damages, sustained by the Gloucester fishing fleet in Fortunate Bay, Newfoundland. The American boats were making larger catches than it pleased the natives to witness, and very concerted attack was made upon them. A number of seines were destroyed, a great quantity of fish were thrown back into the sea, and the boats against which this demonstration was made were compelled to leave those waters. These proceedings Lord Salisbury defended by the plea that the Americans were fishing on Sunday, in contravention of the local law, and were using an illegal kind of net. Therefore his lordship argued they got no more than they deserved, and the claim for damages was not to be sustained.

This argument, it will be noticed, assumes that the municipal regulations peculiar to any particular locality override the rights acquired by virtue of an international treaty. We might arrange with Great Britain for the enjoyment of certain privileges in consideration for a certain equivalent to be rendered in return, but the manner in which these privileges were to be exercised, or in other words their money value, was to be determined by local municipalities, whose interest it was to restrict as much as possible the privileges for which we had bargained. Lord Salisbury's defence assumed even more than that. It assumed that the Newfoundland members would vote for Mr. Conkling forever," but he did not have that number to start with, and "Mr. To" received only 28.
